

Who could blame him for 'circumventing' world?

I WAS interested to read, in a report in Weekend Argus on Sunday, November 23, that solo sailor Anthony Steward "is attempting to become the first man to circumvent the globe in a tiny open boat".

When he set off on this voyage I thought, like many others, that Steward was crazy to try to cross the great oceans of the world in such a tiny craft, offering no protection from the elements.

But with the world in the mess it is in right now, who can blame this intrepid young sailor for trying to circumvent it?

In outwitting the world, he will have achieved what so many have been wanting to do for so long.

If, in his attempt at circumvention, he also succeeds in circumnavigating the globe that will be a glorious plus — and something for the record books, for all time.
